REX INGRAM SCORES AGAIN WITH THE PRISONER OF ZENDA

Motion picture fans who look for exceptional photoplays will have an opportunity on Wednesday and Thursday to see a picture which is one of the outstanding productions of the year for on that date Rex Ingram's "The Prisoner of Zenda" will come to the McSwain Theatre.

It is a story teeming with dramatic action, full of intrigue, romance and excitement. It concerns the adventures of an English nobleman one Rudolf Rassendyll, who because of a remarkable likeness to the ruler of the mythical kingdom of Ruritania, becomes for a time its actual ruler and wins the love of the Princess Flavia.

"The Prisoner of Zenda" is the most popular romance of a generation. From the time when Anthony Hope, then more interested in his political career in England than in writing, composed it, the narrative of Rudolf Rassendyll's reckless adventure has taken hold of the hearts of all who read. This was the first of the stories of romance in little kingdoms in Europe, and no better indication can be had of its success than that it inspired hundreds of writers to imitate it. But none of the resulting stories had the zest, the devil-may-care spirit of the original, for that was written chiefly for the love of imagination the author had; it was as glamorous to him as to his readers.

In the hands of a director such as Rex Ingram, who made "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" for the same motion picture producing organization, "The Prisoner of Zenda" has stepped out of the pages of the book and come very much to life on the screen. Different essentially from "The Four Horsemen," as different as realism is from romance, the newer picture nevertheless has been done upon the same great scale and with the same faithfulness to the spirit of the written page. In every matter, from the designing of the mammoth settings which represent the Castle of Zenda to precision of court etiquette, Mr. Ingram took charge, and the result is a magnificently beautiful picture.

"The Prisoner of Zenda" is a Rex Ingram production for Metro, adapted by Mary O'Hara from the Edward Rieu stage version of Anthony Hope's novel. It was photographed by John F. Seitz.

A cast of unusual excellence, has been assembled for the production. Lewis Stone, Alice Terry, Robert Ercen, Stuart Holmes, Ramon Navarro, Barbara La Marr, Malcolm McGregor, Edward Connelly, Lois Lee play leading roles.

Monocles are being adopted by leading professional and society women in London, in preference to horn spectacles.

Bluebirds frequently have two broods of young in a season, one very early in the spring.

ADA NEWS

WHY SUFFER SO?

Why suffer from a bad back, from sharp, shooting twinges, headaches, dizziness and distressing urinary ills? Ada people recommend Dean's Kidney Pills. Could you ask for stronger proof of merit?

Mrs. Emma Rice, 307 E. 9th St., says "My back was so lame I couldn't get out of bed. I couldn't even turn or help myself in any way. I got so nervous I couldn't bear to have anyone make the least noise. The pains in my back and sides were awful and the doctor said I had kidney trouble. The medicine I took brought me no relief. I finally began using Dean's Kidney Pills and they helped me from the very first and I continued to get better. In a short time I was up and around, doing my work without trouble."

Big Derby's "Anybody's Race"

By Norman E. Brown

If you see a wild looking gentleman gurgling his last as he drops his head into a pile of racing forms give him first aid. With proper care he may live until Derby Day. After that the outcome of the race will decide his fate.

For every one of the hundreds of thousands of thoroughbred fans is trying right now to perform the hardest task in the game—that of picking the winner of the Kentucky Derby—blue ribbon event of the turf, which will be run at Churchill Downs, Saturday, May 19.

The original nominations numbering over 140 have dwindled of course, but that hasn't helped the dopesters. Not one horse is considered an odds or favorite right now for the big event. Which means that the long shot boys are having their inning. Whether they hit it lucky or strike out is up to them—and fate.

Last year Morvich was conceded to be the pick of the field—and ran true. Only the most rabid long shotters bucked the dope.

But this year there are a dozen horses which, according to early dope and form, have a chance to cop.

Probably the most talked of horse is "Sally's Alley." This pretty filly from Willis Sharpe Kolmer's stable may go to the post a favorite. Her early season work has indicated she is in trim. But the rail birds will tell you that Enchantment, Bob McMillan, Messenger, Alice Blue Gown, Actuary, and Goshawk, and two or three others have a good look in. And boy, if they cop!

There is only one thing to do. Pick your horse, lay your money.

And then—try to sleep o' nights.

Here's a popular way to serve
Kellogg's Bran—greatest health food!

Most every one who realizes how effective Kellogg's Bran is for the permanent relief of constipation has their own particular way of serving this wonderful cereal. Most families eat it as a cereal with milk or cream. Others sprinkle it on their favorite hot or cold cereal. Every one enjoys its nut-like flavor!

If you are seeking a hot cereal try this method—Measure out two tablespoonfuls for each member of the family. Mix it with the cereal and cook as you always cook the cereal.

Kellogg's Bran is scientifically prepared and ready to eat, but its regulatory powers are in no way impaired if you cook it with other cereals.

Kellogg's Bran has won the friendly recommendation of physicians because it does give prompt and permanent relief from mild or chronic constipation and because it can be eaten without forming a habit. Again, Kellogg's Bran will free you from drastic, dangerous cathartics.

When constipation conditions exist in your system or when you are threatened, do not take half-way measures. Foods with a partial bran content cannot free you! What you must have is Kellogg's Bran because it is ALL BRAN! Go the limit; get relief!

Every member of your family will delight in eating Bran raisin bread, muffins, pancakes, macaroons, etc. Recipes on every package.

Start eating Bran to-day! Get well—keep well—keep disease out of your home! First-class hotels, clubs and restaurants serve Kellogg's Bran in individual packages. All grocers.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

GIVING GETS:—There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty.—Proverbs 11:24.

NATURE'S DANGERS

In keeping with the past, we presume the eastern people will read of the cyclone in Texas and imagine that the entire Southwest is swept about ever so often by one of these life destroying freaks of nature. It is true the cyclones are terrible and wreak havoc and snuff out the lives of men, women and children. The very picturesqueness of the storms bring awe and fear to the hearts of any one familiar with their pranks and dire results.

It would be well, however, for those eastern people to recall some of the deaths of the eastern seaboard before condemning the Southwest as a land of nature's fury. Where one person in the Southwest is killed by a cyclone, probably a dozen are killed on the eastern seaboard by floods.

After all, we wonder if the danger from nature's anger is not about the same in all sections of the world. In one place mosquitoes deal death in a quiet but certain manner. In another, cold and hunger snuff out the lives of their victims. In the torrid portions, heat and moisture weaken the stamina of man and old man Death creeps upon his victims.

Here in the Southwest, nature works in big ways. The rains come in torrents, heat at other times is above the average and the cold can sweep down from the north with terrific freedom. But after all, a varied climate is the best in which to live. Never in the world's history has a climate approximately the same for the twelve months of the year produced a people of energy and progress. It takes change in the weather to bring out the best.

Then while we fear nature in her anger, would it not be more appropriate to welcome the changes from cold to hot and hot to cold, from a still, windless summer day to a gale of forty miles an hour?

What should a man do when he finds himself out of line with the ideas of the men at the head of his party? we heard a man ask not many days ago. That ought to be simple, it seems to us. If a man believes in the principles of the party of which he is a member and those in authority happen to be disgressing from the age old maxims, then it is up to him to help replace those in authority in the party councils. If on the other hand, the person's ideas have changed and he finds his beliefs different from the principles of the party, as a man of honor he would be compelled to leave that party and go with one more in harmony with his beliefs. We cannot see any difficult problem in that, can you?

Americans are perhaps the most restless on earth. In foreign countries and in the early days of this nation the majority of the inhabitants lived and died where their ancestors had settled, but in these days it is otherwise. In the Southwest a vast majority of the citizens came from the outside and large numbers born here have drifted to other sections. Every fellow is looking for a place where everything is according to his liking, but very few ever find it.

The demand of the Chinese bandits that they be recognized as regular army soldiers by the Chinese government as a ransom for the captive foreigners is something new. However, they may have decided that as government soldiers they will be able to rob with more safety. The distinction in China has been very closely drawn anyway.

Sulphur captured the next meeting of the state pres association. Good for Sulphur. When the newspaper fraternity spends a couple of days at this resort and go home and tell about it, the claims of Sulphur as a health resort will be considerably strengthened.

The human life is much like the weather, sees both sunshine and shadows. It is the bad weather that makes the sunshine all the more enjoyable.

Being rich on paper money may make a fellow feel rather chasty for a time, but a smaller sum tucked away in the bank is a much better outlook for a rainy day.

Foresight is usually the ability to guess right. Sometimes it is mere luck and at others it is a matter of sitting tight at a critical time.

The weather man says frost is probable in Oklahoma to night. Rather discouraging, but we don't know of any way to get around it. We can't legislate against the weather.

French Doggedly Prepare Battlefields For Homes In Rehabilitation Program

(By the Associated Press)

PARIS, May 15.—Of devastated France, it may be said today that, due in no small measure to the dogged fortitude and tenacity of its returned inhabitants, the area has safely passed the crisis in its recovery from the wounds suffered through more than four years of systematic destruction.

According to estimates of various reconstruction agencies the end of next year, if all goes well, should see this vast sore in the side of France practically healed with the exception of course, of some of the cathedrals and other historic monuments which never can be replaced.

A general idea of how the work is progressing may be had from the fact that 553,977 of the 741,993 dwelling houses which were crumbled by cannon have now been completely restored. Other forms of reconstruction are going forward, and in less than five years after the greatest military struggle the world has ever seen, more than 4,000,000 of the 5,000,000 terror-stricken people who fled from the German invader are back on the soil they love and are beginning to catch a glimpse of normal, undisturbed contentment. While the world talks of reparations and the political aspects of the occupation of the Ruhr these weather-hardened refugees are plugging away from sun to sun to restore their cottages and replant their gardens.

This is their one object. True to the temperament of the average provincial Frenchman, these repatriated men and women want only the opportunity of remaking homes for themselves; places where they will no longer be patronized as refugees; places where they may till the soil and enjoy its fruits. They waste no time discussing the Ruhr, and are willing to leave such things to their political leaders if only they themselves may be left unhindered in their efforts to prosper the land which once formed such a fertile part of France.

Will Be Great Factor

A correspondent of The Associated Press who has made a tour of the devastated regions comes away with the outstanding conviction that, of all the elements entering into the work of reconstruction, the greatest factor of all has been and still is the sheer will on the part of the people to restore.

Although there are still many vivid signs of war, the contrast between the wartime aspect of the countryside and that of reconstruction is startling. There are great stretches of rolling, sun-kissed fields still so full of lead and steel shrapnel that it is almost impossible to cultivate so far has been impossible; but there are even greater stretches which have responded to the plow and are now carpeted with a fuzzy growth of green spring grain. There are miles of weed-grown hill-sides still matted with barbed wire, but there are also great piles of it that have been combed out, particularly from the Chemin-de-Dames region, like huge tangled skeins of hair, and are rolled up along the roadsides to rust and disintegrate.

Everywhere everybody is at work. Adolescent striplings, who were mere children when the great exodus occurred and who are yet too young to do the heavy work of building, are following ox-drawn harrows over the fields, while their sturdy, horny-handed fathers, are lifting heavy beams and stones into place while their wrinkled but wiry mothers are washing clothes, cooking meals and doing other household duties.

This metamorphosis from desolation to reconstruction is particularly noticeable in cities and towns that were most completely destroyed. Montdidier, for example, which bore the brunt of some of the most terrible bombardments of the war, looks almost like a new city. Chauny also, the little village in the Somme which completely disappeared, has been almost entirely restored. The large chemical factory there—one of the 22,900 that were wiped out—is again humming with business and is much more modern and better equipped than the old one. More than 19,000 similar factories in the devastated regions have been completed. Practically everything in the village has been restored except the church. This is true almost everywhere; the church apparently is the last thing to be rebuilt. Absolute necessities must come first.

Rheims, Soissons, Lille and other cities of that type are making progress but their destruction was so colossal and the amount of debris to be removed was so much greater that restoration necessarily must be slow.

A STEP TOWARD SETTLEMENT

(Star-Telegram)

The British reply to the German reparations offer has greater significance than a mere disagreement with Germany as to the amount of reparations that ought to be paid and can be paid.

The action of the British government in sending such a reply, in spite of the rather undiplomatic course taken by France in ignoring Great Britain in framing her own reply to the German note, is an instance of rare statesmanship.

The reply surprised France quite as much as it disappointed Germany and thus has created an atmosphere in which it might be possible for Great Britain and France to reach an agreement on reparations.

For while Great Britain takes the position that the amount offered by Germany is too small and the guarantees insufficient, that does not mean that Great Britain agrees with the French position. Great Britain is quite as emphatic in the position that the amount asked by the French is beyond Germany's ability to pay and that guarantees of the character expected by France are not calculated to promote the peace of Europe.

Moreover, the British position is that the Ruhr occupation is a mistake.

Great Britain therefore, occupies strategic ground and its reply to Germany may be taken to be a first step toward doing something very definite to settle the whole reparations muddle.

The basis has been laid for an agreement between France and Great Britain, and that is a necessary prelude to a settlement.

This plan would involve the accumulation and expenditure of a sum roughly estimated from $150,000 to $500,000, to make the stone structure a permanent memorial.

ELLIS PARKER BUTLER—
EDITORIAL SPEAKING

I do not believe there are many people in this country who need an introduction to Ellis Parker Butler, whose first fame arrived with a little story called "Pigs in Pigs." That fame has been growing steadily ever since with his many books, short stories and moving pictures.

He has lectured, too, in all parts of the United States and is, perhaps, best known as one of our most popular humorists, though he writes fiction of a serious and interesting nature, also. He says he is one of the few American writers who did not begin his literary training on a newspaper.

He was born in Muscatine, Ia., and went East about 25 years ago. He is very modest about himself. It is difficult to get him to tell you anything, but I finally did extract that he is married—and thus fully qualified to write for the Star Author Series of Matrimonial Adventures—has four children, two of whom are twins; and that when he is not writing he would like to be fishing; and that he is much interested in the cultivation of tulips.

You have an understanding when you are talking to him of the great popularity of his work, for he sees the little, kindly, human points of life in a humorous way that never hurts—and with such amazing insight, too. He is constructively entertaining.

"The Tenth Mrs. Tulkington" is a humorous story—yes, but it is a serious side."

MARY STEWART CUTTING, JR.

I.

My only excuse for throwing George Tithers into the lily-pool at midnight is that I thought he was my wife Susan. As a president of a bank and a highly respected and weighty citizen I most seriously object to being called "Baldy," and I particularly object to being slapped gaily on the top of my head with an open hand. Or any other kind of hand. And I believed this Tithers person—my wife's brother, I'm ashamed to say—was in Europe. Naturally, then, when I had been dreaming that my wife was standing above me in a divorce court, denouncing me to the judge, and declaring that even the sight of my bald head had come to be nauseating to her, my first thought—when I felt the slap on the head and heard, "What ho, Baldy!"—was that Susan was attacking me. In an instant I had leaped from the marble bench and had grappled with my attacker. George Tithers cried out a moment too late, for I had already given a mighty heave and had thrown him full length into the lily-pool. As my mistake became apparent to me as I saw George Tithers coming out of the lily-pool on his hands and knees, I apologized frankly.

"I beg your pardon," I said; "I thought you were my wife."

"Rather! I should think so!" George said as he emerged and shook himself like a dog. "But it's not a nice way to treat a lady, Tully; is it, now? Wife drowning isn't done in the best circles any more, you know. But I say: Has it come to this, really? The little gray home in the West must be off its feed, what?"

Now, my home is not gray and it is not in the West; it is white marble and on Long Island; but I let that pass. George Tithers had—in his silly way—put his finger on the exact fact: our home was "off its feed," as he chose to say, and entirely off its feed. I made George remain where he was while I explained the matter fully and to its least detail. Toward the end of the first half hour, as the night grew chilly, his teeth began to chatter and a little later he sneezed many times, with gradually increasing violence, but he listened patiently. This deepened my thought that George and his precious wife must be dead broke again, but I was glad to have even a dead-broke brother-in-law hear the truth about Susan and myself. That truth was that after twenty years of married life we hated each other. As a matter of fact the reason I was on the marble bench by the lily-pool at midnight was because I had told Susan I would never again spend an hour under the same roof with her and that tomorrow we would begin seemingly but immediate preparations for a separation and divorce. I had meant to spend the night on that marble bench.

"I say!" George exclaimed between sneezes, when I had concluded. "The little old trouble has become quite a snorter, what? Jolly full time the doctor was called, yes? Arrived in the nick of time, didn't I, Tully? And, I say, do you mind if I ensconce myself in the pool a bit? The water seems a bit warmer than the air."

The idiot, I do believe, would have gone back into the pool, but that precious wife of his came out looking for him. She seemed to take his lily-pool bath as a matter of course, quite as if it was a habit of his to bathe in lily-pools at midnight, fully clad—as I have no doubt it is.

"Bathing, George?" she said, after she had greeted me—kissed me, mind you! "Be sure to have a brisk rub before you turn in. And you can come into the house now, Augustus; Susan has explained everything and the chauffeur is sleeping in the kitchen. Susan has taken his room in the garage; temporarily, I hope, but it is a very comfortable room. You do treat your servants well, Augustus. It is a lovely trait."

"Susan attends to the servants," I said reluctantly.

"Does she? She does everything so well, doesn't she?" said George Tithers' wife.

I might have said, in reply to that, "Too confounded well!" but I did not.

"The trouble," said George, when he had poured himself a chill-preventer, "is that Susan is a wife in a million. I'll say in eight million. You told her she was a wife in a million, didn't you, old top, when you were a newly-wed?"

"None of your business!" I growled.

"Ah! He confesses!" said George Tithers. "And now, Gussie, me lad, because she is just that—a wife in a million, what? Bored! Biting the old fingernails with ennui! Dead sick of dear old Sue, and dear old Sue dead sick of nice old Gussie! The trouble with you and Sue, me lad, is that you need a couple of stage-managers. That's trouble Number One. And trouble Number Two hangs on it—you're both natural bigamists."

"Stop right there!" I cried.

"Like all of us! Like all of us!" said George.

"Not another word!" I exclaimed, exceedingly angry.

"When up!" George said then. "Stop here! The boss says stop. We're through, Amelia. I only meant to tell him of Lord Algy and Lady Mercedes, but he says 'stop!' and we stop!"

"Oh, Lord Algy and Lady Mercedes!" exclaimed George's wife. "The happiest two people! Such a happy pair!"

"Always marrying! Always marry and gay, what?"

The poor wretch laughed heartily at his miserable pun.

"So cheery and happy! Always divorcing each other and marrying somebody else, and marrying each other again so gaily!" exclaimed Amelia.

"Because a man gets tired of the dear old wife after twenty years, even if she is my sister," said George.

"And of the dear old reliable husband, even if he is the most respectable old baldy," said Amelia.

"Especially if he is the same dear old reliable husband," George corrected her. "It's the blessed routine that warps 'em, don't you think?"

"Rather!" said Amelia heartily.

"It's like being married to the bally old Westminster Abbey, what?" said George. "Act of parliament needed to permit even the riotous innovation of a new tombstone. Not a new hair on Old Bald-Top in thirteen years! Not a new-style hic-cough out of dear old Susie since the wedding bells!"

"Stop it!" I cried irritably, for he was patting the top of my head, the silly donkey. "Leave my head alone! What about this Lord Algy and this Lady Mercedes—if you must talk?"

"Oh, they're just off-again on-again gay little marriers, Augustus!" George said. "Tired of one wife, get another; tired of one husband, get another. It's done in their circle. A man does get tired of the same old wife. Routine stuff, if you get me. Deadly monotonous, what? Sick of the sight of her; hate her—what?"

"It's in us," said Amelia placidly. "The bigamy thing, I mean. Any man who can afford it and is not restrained by convention or his ethics hops about a bit; has a variety. King Solomon, the sultan, Henry Eighth, Lord Byron. And Tithers, here."

"In a way of speaking," said Tithers modestly.

"And myself, Tithers," said Amelia. "In a way of speaking, as you remark, darling, And Cleopatra, and the queen of Sheba—by all accounts."

"Now, stop this nonsense!" I said. "You know, both of you, that you do not run about after other men and women."

"Well, rather not!" cried George. "He don't get us, Amelia; he's a bit dense. Tell him."

"Marriage," said Amelia, "is almost never a failure; married life is. Marriage is the first joining of two people together, and jolly sport it is with the getting acquainted intimately, rubbing sharp points together, and all. Something 'interestin' all the while, what? And then, in a few years—five, maybe, or ten, or twenty—comes married life, the routine stuff. Awful bore, sometimes; same old wife; same old husband; same old ways and everything! Nothing new! They get jolly well sick of each other, and no wonder."

"A man—a man with a business to attend to—can't be running around divorcing his wife every day or so," I said.

"Cricket, no!" exclaimed George Tithers. "He'd be doing nothing else; that's not the right card—the right card is to marry the whole lot at the first jump off, if you get me."

"I don't," I said dryly.

"You did it, though," said Amelia, with a laugh. "Susan did it, too. It's a poor stick of a woman that isn't a dozen women, and a poor stick of a man that isn't half a dozen men."

"What we mean," Tithers broke in, "is that you and Sue need to be stage-managed, what? You two have twenty roles in you, between the two of you, but you won't change. You, Augustus, keep in the middle of the stage forever and a day as the Heavy Father and Sue has been playing the Faithful Wife

Old Trails Lead Auto Tourist From Capital to Coast

The rubber-tired tenderfoot can now traverse the vast stretches of these United States without a sextant or a compass, and be sure of getting home if the gas holds out.

The trails have been blazed, and the man who is fortunate enough to possess anything from a cycle car to a limousine can hit the trail to the place his fancy leads, and go by the best and shortest possible route.

Most historic of all the new system of national highways is the National Old Trails Road, 3030 miles from Washington, D. C., to Los Angeles. It is the all-weather route from the nation's capital to the capital of the bathing-beauty belt.

The trail marker, fittingly enough, is a red, white, and blue rectangle, displayed at convenient intervals, and at every intersection. It leads the tourist from Washington or Baltimore along Braddock's Road and the National Pike, the first highway which the nation constructed, through country reminiscent of young Col. Washington and the Indian Wars, to St. Louis by way of Wheeling, Columbus, and Indianapolis. From St. Louis to Kansas City the trail follows the historic Boone's Lick Road, then opens on the pioneer's route of blood and sand, the Santa Fe Trail. Westward of Santa Fe is the Grand Canyon Route to the orange groves—the path of the Spanish conquistadores and the indomitable padres.

East and West, the National Old Trails Road traverses thirteen states and ninety counties. It is a route rich in historic interest from terminus to terminus, and penetrates what many consider the world's grandest scenic region. The road is hard surfaced from Washington to Terre Haute, and in sections beyond Terre Haute. Most of the highway through the Southwest has a dragged dirt surface, good in dry weather—and this is dry weather country.

Excellent hotel accommodations are to be had at the natural night stops for the entire distance. By means of the official auto trails maps, which are the keys to the national system of marked highways and to the conditions to be encountered along these highways, a coast-to-coast trip over the National Old Trails Road is not only practicable for the average tourist, but can be made with ease and assurance, combining maximum pleasure with minimum difficulty.

But it was done. It was not a complete success, it would not stick in my eye, but I dangled it from a string and learned to swing it around my forefinger quite well. Exceedingly well, I may say.

BRITISH OPPOSE
RULE IN EGYPT

Many Signers on Document to Disfavor Allenby's Rule in Egypt as Failure.

LONDON—No fewer than 100 members of the House of Commons signed the remarkable document disavowing the present British policy in Egypt and appealing to the government to find new measures that will restore order and confidence in that country.

This declaration characterizes Lord Allenby's administration in Egypt as an utter failure. "There is no constitution in Egypt today; there is only martial law," it says.

"There is profound unrest, likely from time to time to break into violence; there is an additional burden for the British taxpayer, interruption of commerce, and a growing mistrust and dislike of the policy of this country throughout the Near East."

The members of the House declare that there are only two possible policies for the British government to follow. One is to revoke the declaration of independence approved last year by the vote of the House of Commons; to make Egypt a part of the British Empire; to suppress by military force any resistance; and to hold the Egyptian people in subjection until such time as they acquiesce in the position sufficiently to have some measure of self-government. "To this course," they add, "we believe most of our fellow-countrymen, are unalterably opposed. It might be possible, though it would be a breach of a solemn pledge and a reversal of British tradition unparalleled in our history."

The subscribers to the statement say that the other course "is to face certain facts, the ignoring of which has been responsible for the failure of Lord Allenby. The first of these facts is that the Egyptian people is not only set in its dependence, but is also so far educated in politics as to reject a nominal independence accompanied by a permanent military occupation and the control of its principal departments of government by the nominees of a foreign power."

Dairying Around Roff.

Roff's banks have distributed in the vicinity of Roff the past few days, each a car of registered Jersey milk cows, all fresh, further stimulating the extensive cream shipping business now carried on from this center. Roff's cream stations have been informed officially that Roff and vicinity is producing more cream than any other part of the county, this is due perhaps, to the fact that Roff's first cream station was among the first established in the county. It is a fact, nevertheless, and this step on the part of our banks is the means of inducing more people to become interested in the cream producing business.

The State Board of Agriculture has recently taken steps to increase first-class butter production and all cream tested is rated at its face value. This is done to bring the value of cream and the price of butter up to the standard required by other states. Cream is classed and each individual in this manner gets for his cream what it is actually worth.

It would not be amiss here to mention the interest being taken in poultry raising. We are reliably informed that there is more poultry being shipped from Roff at this time than ever before in the history of the town. This means that there will be more poultry raised this year, and furthering still, the farming interests. We mentioned last week the interest being manifested in hog raising.

County Agent Hill is doing a loyal part by our farmers in stimulating these lines of agriculture which is proving of untold benefit to our people especially the farmers in plowing the mow the turbulent waters of misfortune brought about by two unsuccessful years just past, and we feel the financial conditions here will compare favorably with any part of the country.—Roff Eagle.

WILLIAM FOX PRESENTS "A FOOL THERE WAS"

By Porter Emerson Browne. Inspired by Rudyard Kipling's famous poem, "The Vampire."

The spark-plug of high-powered drama. The story of a woman who lived to love and a fool who loved and died—you'll never forget, "Kiss me, my fool."

Casablanca Awaits Tourists

(By the Associated Press)

CASABLANCA, Morocco, April 14.

The work of constructing a port at Casablanca, undertaken by the French, is done. Fifty large steamships can today find anchorage in the artificial lake created by the breakwater.

This development is part of the French program to enlarge Morocco, Tunis and Algeria as trade centers, and especially to attract tourists. There are now good hotels at points of interest, and good roads. Fifteen years ago Casablanca had 20,000 inhabitants; today it counts 100,000.
